

Provincial Court of British Columbia

The Provincial Court deals with charges against adults for most crimes. It does not conduct trials for adults charged with murder and a few other rare crimes like piracy. Those trials are held in the BC Supreme Court.

In youth court the Provincial Court deals with charges against young people aged 12 to 17 for all crimes.

Over 95% of all criminal cases in BC are heard in Provincial Court.

Laws in criminal court

Two federal statutes apply to most criminal matters. The Criminal Code of Canada sets out criminal offences and procedure and the Controlled Drugs and Substances Act contains criminal offences specific to illegal drugs and the substances used to produce them.

Methods of appearance in criminal cases

Criminal cases involve different stages and different types of court appearances. In-person attendance is required for some appearances at the Court. For others, remote attendance is required, or there may be a choice as to whether to attend in-person or remotely.

The Court's Notice 28 describes the default method of how different kinds of cases are heard in the Appendix.

If your first language is not English

In Canada people may ask to have their criminal trial or preliminary inquiry in English or French (or if circumstances warrant in both official languages). The right to apply for a trial in either official language (or a bilingual trial) is found in the Criminal Code section 530.

If you do not understand or speak English or French you may request a court interpreter.

Criminal court lists and letter codes

Criminal court lists, which show scheduled criminal cases, can be accessed from the provincial government website.

Court lists use specific letter codes to record the purpose of court appearances and their outcome. The letter codes are the same as the ones used in JUSTIN, which is the database used to manage criminal cases in BC. To find the meaning of a letter code on a court list download the JUSTIN code table.

Practice Directions and Criminal Caseflow Management Rules

The Criminal Caseflow Management Rules apply to criminal cases in Provincial Court. They are intended to reduce the number of court appearances that accused persons make before trial. They give specific instructions on certain aspects of criminal cases.

The Chief Judge has also issued Practice Directions to provide clarification and guidance about procedural matters in criminal cases.

Information and services for victims and witnesses

Testimonial accommodations are processes that may be taken to support victims or witnesses of crime during their testimony. While an accused has the right to hear the evidence of anyone testifying against them, counsel or a witness may make a request to a judge for testimonial accommodation. A few examples of accommodations are having a support person nearby, testifying from another courtroom or location, and testifying from behind a screen. Further information about testimonial accommodations and services for victims and witnesses can be found below.

Publication bans

People may access information from court files or hear information when watching court proceedings that may be subject to a publication ban. This means they are prevented from publishing, transmitting or broadcasting that information. The Court's BAN-1 Bans on Publication policy provides some examples of publication bans.
